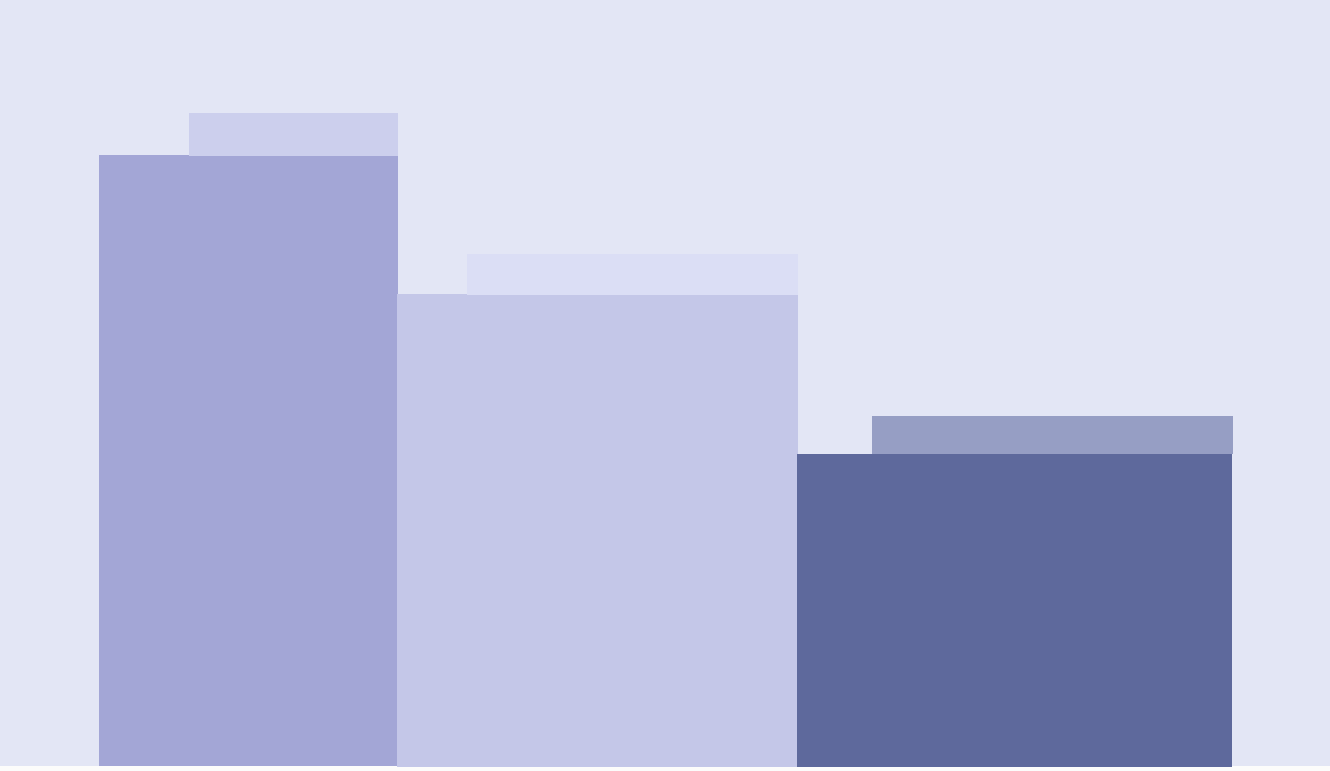
A notebook for things worth making.

Room for good ideas.

Less noise. A little more possibility.



Start with a question.

The useful kind. The one that makes you look again.

01 Notice the ordinary.

Look closely at what already exists. The details we overlook often hold the beginning of something new.

02 Make room to experiment.

A first draft is an invitation, not a verdict. Keep the good parts, change the rest, and give the idea another chance.

03 Keep things simple.

Make every choice earn its place. Good work does not need to be loud to be remembered.

What comes next?

A little space for your next good idea.
